The art of classical architecture and construction has been a life long passion for Bill Harrison. After graduating with a degree in architecture from the Georgia Institute of Technology, he toured Europe, and North and South America, studying everything from porticoes to palaces, memorizing materials and structural details. From master architects he learned proportion, scale and construction, which he would later teach to his designers and builders.

When he returned to Atlanta, he opened a design/build firm. Its services grew in demand because of Harrison's commitment to fine design and practical, cost efficient construction techniques. That firm's success laid the cornerstone for Bill Harrison's next venture.

He established Harrison Design Associates with a single goal: To create ancestral homes and public buildings in keeping with age-old traditions. Today, many of American's most distinguished and celebrated citizens have requested Harrison's firm of more than a 65 architects and designers to fashion custom new homes or renovate existing ones. His client list includes eminent CEOs, high level executives, captains of industry and leaders in the entertainment field.
